IV. not referring to animals. (1) part of a tree, a branch, Gn. Ex. 26: B. 97 (in Dict.). (2) a member of a sentence:—Tōðál comma, lim cola, An. Ox. 18 b, 10. Lim cola, limes dæ[ ] com-mata, 26, 1, 2. Mid lime (lima, MS.) † tōðala colopho, 131. Lime cola, 7, 196. Þur[h] lim, 2850. Þurh lim and tōðál per cola, i. membra et commata, 201.

lim. Dele last passage, and 'cola, 20, 24' in l. 6, and add:—Lím cementum lapidum. Txs. 49, 449. Lím tō wealle cementum, Wrt. Voc. i. 75, 22. Hrim on lime, Ruin. 4. v. weall-lím.

líman; p. de To emit roys, beam, shine:—Þ þ leóht þe þær lýmde betweoþ þám þýstrum wæs beorlute þonne dages leóht ut diem vinceret lux illa quae inter tenebras radiosset, Gr. D. 171, 5. [v. N. E. D. leam to shine, cf. Icel. ljóma.] v. á-líman; leóma.

líman to join. [v. N. E. D. liue to cement.] v. ge-líman(-ian); líming.

limb-stefning. The gloss at Wrt. Voc. i. 61, 46 is: Peripetasma limb-stefning. Comparison with 26, 6, limbus stemning vel hem, suggests (?) that the gloss should read, peripetasma, limbus stefning.

lim-fin, e; f. A lime-heap:—Danon on gerihthe on cyneges límfine, of ðære fine nider, C. D. B. i. 518, 41. Cf. wudu-fin.

lim-geleg. Add:—Limgeleg liniamento (cf. Hpt. Gl. 465, 73, where the same passage is glossed: Liniamento, specie t similitudine of hīwe † gelicynsse, imagine), Wrt. Voc. ii. 79, 47. v. lim-tæden.

lim-geshif physical vision, sight by means of the bodily eye (? cf. A man has na lym þat he is warere wiþ þan wiþ his eghe, Hamp. Ps. 16, 9. þe lyme of syzte organum visus, N. E. D. under limb; I):—Ealle menn árisað mid límgeshíðum (corporeibus), Ps. Rdr. 301, 4.

líming. Add:—Líming liture, Wrt. Voc. ii. 85, 51. The passage to which all three glosses belong is: Turrem . . . forti lituræ compage constructam erexit, Ald. 62, 13. In Hpt. Gl. 509, 54 and An. Ox. 4439 the reading is liunne.

lim-leás. Add: ,not having all one's limbs:—Gif hwá áléfed wære, óðde límléas . . . Hwæt sceole wē smeágan embe ðá þe gewitað tō ðám ecum forwyrd, hwæder hī áléfed beón óðde límléas?, Hml. Th. i. 236, 28–33.

líman. Add: I. to befall, happen:—Hē hīene ofslōg, swá hīe eác selfum síþþan æfter lamp, Ors. 4, 5; S. 170, 10. II. to belong, pertain:—Bútan ðém wioda ðe tō ðém sealtern límpð, Txs. 438, 25. Límped, 444, 16. Méðu mid riakte tō ðém lande límpað, 439, 7: 438, 15. III. to pertain to, be concerned with, have relation to:—Ræðingca tō þæs hālgan árwyrþnesse límpende lectiones ad ipsius sancti uenerationem pertinentes, Angl. xiii. 430, 936. IV. expressing a ueneration of equivalence where the same amount is expressed in different units:—xxx. ombra gōdes uuelesces aloð, ðet límped tō .xv. mittum, Txs. 444, 21. V. to be suitable, be applicable:—Gif [lí]þe wyrtdrenc ne límpre, sele strange, Lch. ii. 264, 3. [v. N. E. D. límp.] v. mis-líman.

-límpfull, -límplæcan, -límplic, -límplicness. v. ge-límpfull, &c.: límplice. Add: v. ge-límplice.

lim-ræden. The passage where this word is given as a gloss to chlamide is: Pro chlamide, quam angelicæ puritatis liniamento . . . adsciscibat, Ald. 35, 10. In Wrt. Voc. ii. 79, 47, which refers to the same passage, liniamento is glossed by lim-geleg: it is probable, then, that lim-ræden is a gloss to liniamento rather than to chlamide, and has the same meaning as lim-geleg (q. v.).

lim-wérig. Add:—Limwærigne, Txs. 126, 16.

lin. Add:—Lin mantergium, Txs. 76, 634. Lín, Wrt. Voc. ii. 55, 42. Hí befealdan hí mid líne uolunt crucem sindone, Angl. xiii. 421, 808. Hē onfeng líne (linteum) and hine mid begyrde, Hml. A. 155, 92, 103. [v. N. E. D. line.] v. bisceop-heáfod- (not bisceop-, heáfod-) lin.

lin-æcer (?), es; m. A field where flax is grown:—In línæceran (be?) wege þam innmæstan; of línæceran innau ðone hege, Cht. . 239, 10. Cf. lin-leáh, fleax-æcer.

lind. Add: I.:—Lindan tilig, An. Ox. 2, 8. In ðá geápan linde, C. D. iii. 375, 5. II.:—Stōd under linde, under leuhtum scyldre, Lch. iii. 52, 19. [The word occurs in many local names. v. C. D. vi. 309–310.]

Lindcylene Lincoln:—Burga fife, Lígoraceaster and Lin[d]cylene (the d is erased; Lindcyne, -kylne, Lincoln, v. ll.), Chr. 942; P. 110, 17. Lindcylene (-cylne, -colene, v. ll.) ceastre geréfan praefectum Lindocoline ciuitatis, Bd. 2, 16; Sch. 177, 20. On Lindcylene, 2, 18; Sch. 181, 19. Lindisfaran. l. Lindesfaran. Dele the bracket after 'Northumbria', and add:—Lindesfara landes is syfan þūsēnd hýða mid hæðfeldande, C. D. B. i. 414, 17. Myrcna þeode and Lindesfærena (-pharona, v. l.), Bd. 4, 3; Sch. 350, 8. Myrcna mægþ and Middeldengla and Lindesfærena (-færona, v. l.), Sch. 367, 7. Hē hine ásānde Myrceon tō bisceope and Middeldenglum and Lindesfarum, Shm. 59, 14. [The form in the last passage in Dict. seems taken from Bede's Latin Life of Cuthbert: Insula Lindisfarnea, c. xvi. The same chapter has the form Lindisfarnensium insula.]

Lindesfearnea-landing, es; m. A native of Lindisfarne:—Eðilnald Lindisfearneolandinga biscop, Iv. Skt. p. 188, 3.

Lindesse, . . . Lindesige. l. Lindes[s], e; f. Lindes-ig, e; f. Lindes-ige, es; m. Lindes-igland, es; n.:—On Lindesse lande (in Lindesiglande, v. l.), 3, 27; Sch. 318, 18. II. as part of a religious service, a canticle. v. lof; II:—Öþrum dagum on ðære wucan sý cantic gesungen, þæt is lofsang, þe tō þām dæge belimpð, R. Ben. 38, 4. Lofsang of þām godspelle, þæt is: 'Benedictus Dominus Deus Israel,' 36, 21. [v. N. E. D. lof-song.]

lof-sealm, es; m. Lauds, psalms (xlvi-cc taken together) used in the church service:—þone lofsealm (laudes), þæt is, 'Laudate Dominum de celis,' R. Ben. 36, 18; 38, 9.

lofung. Add:—Wytme siē him lofung (laudatio) mīn, Ps. Rdr. 103, 34.

log (P) water:—Mid lande and mid loge cum terra et cum aqua, C. D. iv. 202, 1. [The grant in which this phrase occurs is of land that had been held by a 'hūskarl' of king Edward. The alliterative phrase 'land and loġr' is common in Icelandic, so perhaps loge shows Scandinavian influence and is the same as English lage (<lagu, q. v.), or it may be from a noninvasive log. v. N. E. D. lough.]

-lōg. v. fea-lōg: loga. Add: v. þeod-loga: -logen. v. for-logen: -lōgendlic. v. ge-lōgendlic.

lōgian. Add:—Wē lajiað and lōgiað crīstene men into Godes hūse, Wlft. 154, 17. Hit biþ tō langsum eall hēr tō lōgigenne þe ðām clōnūm nýtenum oððe þe þām unclōnūm on ðære ealdan æ it is too tedious to give here an ordered account of everything in the old law concerning the clean and unclean animals, Hml. S. 25, 82.

loh-sceaft. l. lōh-sceaft, and add: a stick with a strap to it (?). v. lō.

-lōm, -lōme, -lōmlæcing, -lōmlæcness. v. ge-lōm, &c.

6m-lic, adj. Frequent:—Lómlicum siccetungum (per) crebra suspiria, An. Ox. 984. v. ge-lómlic.

lómlice, lómlician, lómrræd[e]. v. ge-lomlice, &c.: lopystre. Add: [Adapted from Latin locusta.]

oppe. Dele 'flea (?)', and the query after 'spider,' and add: [v. N. E. D. lop.] Cf. lobbe.

lose. Add:—Þý læs hiora ænig tō lore wurde, Nar. 12, 25. Tō lore (ose, v. l.), Bd. 5, 9; Sch. 595, 13 (v. los). Hē þæs scipes geprowode a fwyrdlan and lore (lyre, v. l.) ealra þāra þinga þe in hini wæron novis vrum omnium jacturam peruluit, Gr. D. 141, 14. [v. N. E. D. locr.]

-lora. v. hléow-lora: -lorenness. v. for-loresian.

lorh. Add:—Hē sceal fela towtōla habban: flexlinan, spinle, reól, s'odlan, lorgas, Angl. ix. 263, 11. In this passage the word seems to belong to the a-stem masculine declension, but in the Epinal-Erfurt glossaries to the i-stem feminine, with i-umlaut of o. [For the meaning pole, cf. fugol-treów.]

mid-gesīp (?):—Midgeardum enhlenned sodalibus vallatus, Hpt. Gl. 422, 38. Napier (An. Ox. 680, note) from this passage deduces a midgesīp (cf. Goth. miþ-gasiþa) on the ground that mid as preposition here would be unsuitable. But if the construction with verbs similar to enhlenned is noted (e.g. ymb-gyrðan, -habban, -hegian, -hīpan) it will be seen that mid is a usual construction, so that mid gesīdan seems to be quite unobjectionable.

mid-hilte, an; f. The middle part of the hilt:—Midhilde capulus, manubrium gladii vel uniuscuiusque rei, Wülck. Gl. 199, 21. [Cf. Icel. metal-kaffi the middle piece of the haft.]

nīd-micel. The full passage in Bl. H. is: Medmycel ārende wē þyder habbað, and ūs is þearf þ̅ wē hit þēh gefyllon we have an unimportant errand thither, and we must however carry it out, 233, 11. The poem seems to support the idea contained in nēdmicel, that of urgency: Ūsic lust hweted on þā leodmeare micel mōdes hiht, An. 286. In support, too, of nēdmicel is the accent in the MS. Moreover St. Andrew would hardly have spoken of his mission as unimportant.

nīd-nīd, e; f. Absolute, unavoidable necessity:—Gif ænig geþristlāse būtan slæperne tō slæpenne būtan hē neādneōde hæbbe (absque causa ineuitabili), Chrd. 61, 9.

statement of the oxherd in Ælfric's Colloquy, 'Ealle niht ic stande ofer þā oxan waciende for þeófan, Coll. M. 20, 291', was a crime whose prevalence justified the attention given it by the law. To guard against the disposal of property acquired by it, the sale of cattle was allowed only in the presence of witnesses, and when security was given as to rightful ownership. v. Ll. Th. i. 276, 7-16: 282, 24-28: 296, 1-2. If a man returned from a journey not undertaken for the purchase of cattle, and brought some back with him, he was obliged within five days of his return to give notice of his purchase to the proper authority. v. Ll. Th. i. 274, 23-276, 5. Regulations were made for the tracing of stolen cattle (Ll. Th. i. 352, 3-13), and the oaths to be taken by those engaged in a suit concerning stolen cattle were fixed by law. v. Ll. Th. i. 178, 10-180, 16. An instance of cattle-stealing is mentioned in C. D. ii. 134. v. in-or; írfe.

ram-hund. Add: The true form of the word, which is given only in comparatively modern MSS., is doubtful. Rain-, raine-hound, as well as ram-hundt, occur (v. Ll. Lbmn. 626, 2), and these seem to represent the original word more nearly than does ram-. In a MS. of much earlier date (13th cent.) it is said: Canem, qui in pluvia sine alicuius cura, uigilat, quem Angli dicunt renhund (rén-, regn-? or could ren = ærn. Cf. ren-degen), xiij d., Lbmn. 367, n. Liebermann suggests that the correct form would be hrán-hund, a reindeer-hound, but as in the same passage the payment for a slain greyhound is lxxx d., it seems hardly likely that any kind of deerhound could be compensated for by so small a sum as xiiij d. It is also said: Si quis canem, qui custodire domini sui caulas et lupam abigere, occiderit, persoluat domino canis vi sol. Perhaps the rain-hound was an outdoor watch-dog? or a house-dog?

riht-gifu a lawful gift, a gift that is rightfuly made. The word occurs in a section of Cnut's laws headed 'De officiis domino debitis', but what was the nature of the obligation to which it is applied is nowhere explained:—Hláfordes rihtgifu stande æfre unáwend, Ll. Th. i. 422, 2 (cf. Hláfordes gifu þe he on riht áge tó gifanne, 292, 16): ii. 302, 7.

riht-hamscyld þ:—Gif man rihtthamscyld þurhstind . . . Gif feaxfang geweorð, Ll. Th. i. 12, 1-3. [In the note to these laws a passage from the Lex Saxonum is quoted giving two articles: 1. 6. Si gladio uestem seu scutum alterius incideret . . . 7. Si per capillos alium comprehenderit . . . As ham denotes a garment, it seems as if the English text might be a corrupt form of a law corresponding to the former of these two, and in the same note the following emendation is suggested: Gif man on unriht ham ödðe scyld (= uestem seu scutum) þurhstind.]

riht-hámsöcn howebreaking which is such in the eye of the law, house-breaking which has been actually committed (not merely attempted):—Inuasio domus vel curie, quod dicitur rihtthámsöcne (cf. infectam inuasionem, quod Angli dicunt unworhtre hámsöcne, 615, 16), Ll. Lbmn. 614, 3.

D. 201, 24-26.

sufel-mete. See preceding word.

sūgan. II. The verb seems to describe hiccup, and the passage at Lch. ii. 192, 13 might be translated 'when he has hiccupped'. The form at Lch. ii. 169, 1 is sýgeþ.

suga. Add:—Æt stráthá .xx. sugen[a] . . . æt [m]eldebunnan .xxiii. suge[na], Cam. Phil. Trans. 1902, p. 15. Cf. Tó suge-bróce, C. D. B. ii. 284, 30. On suga-róde, C. D. iii. 48, 9.

sulh. I. The passage Li. Th. i. 208, 12 seems to belong to II, as dealing with an extent of land rather than with an implement. Such an area was to provide two men with good horses. Reference to such men may be found in the section on the gebúr, where it is said: Gif hē aferað ne dearf hē wyrcean ðá hwile ðe his hors úte bið, Ll. Th. i. 434, 9. See too aferian. Cf. sulh-ælnesse for the use of sulh in the sense of II.

æstel. For the first 14 lines in Dict. substitute: This word is of uncertain meaning. In the two instances of its use in which from the context the character of the object denoted by the word may be to some extent inferred, the meanings seem different. In Wrt. Voc. i. 81, 23 it occurs in a list of words connected with the fabric and furniture of a church, chorus chor, gradus stape, indicatorium æstel, scabellum sceamul; in Past. 9, 1-3 it is associated with a book. As the word seems adapted from Low Latin astella, a chip, plank, board, in each case some kind of board may be intended; in the former a notice-board (?), in the latter a board used in the binding of a book, on which the title of the book was inscribed (cf. Latin index = title of a book). For a description of binding see Rū. 27 and Jn. L. p. 188. From the latter, as throwing light on the value of Alfred's æstel, may be quoted the following: 'Hē gesmōdæde ðā gehrino ðā ðe ūtan on sint, and hit gehrinede mid gōde and mid gimnum æc mid suulfrise oferygdede fæconleās feh.' See a paper by E. J. Thomas in Camb. Philol. Trans. 1916. [N. E. D., D. D. astel.]
